March 7, 2018

Melissa Johnson, WSLHA Lobbyist

With just 4 days left until the end of the 2018 legislative session on March 8th, lawmakers are pushing to finish their work. Friday was the opposite house cutoff (House bills out of the Senate; Senate bills out of the House), with many bills dying simply because legislators ran out of time. But remember that a bill is never really "dead" until the Legislature adjourns. And there are bills that didn't pass by Friday's cutoff but are still in play because they have been deemed NTIB or "necessary to implement the budget."

Good news! Our priority bill, SB 6157 (prior authorization), passed the House last week with a strong 90-8 vote! It now goes to Governor Inslee for his consideration.

The House and Senate will focus now on negotiating a final budget. The House passed their budget earlier this week, and it includes the additional one billion dollars to fulfill the Supreme Court's directive to fully fund K-12 education this year. The bulk of this funding goes to educator salaries and special education. Because the Senate's budget also included this funding, we can expect the final budget to include it as well.

Because the House and Senate must pass a bill in the same format for it to move onto the Governor, lawmakers will also spend the remaining days disputing or concurring with amendments that the opposite chamber put on their bills. Bills that make it through the entire legislative process are delivered to Governor Inslee for his action. The Governor has 20 days after adjournment of the session (not including Sundays) to take action on bills.
